The meeting will be followed a talk by Carey Davies.

Carey is the BMC's hill walking officer, a role which, among many other things, has seen him lead the Mend Our Mountains campaign. But he is also known beyond the BMC for his writing and journalism. A monthly contributor to The Guardian's Country Diary column and a regular writer for The Great Outdoors magazine, he has walked with a rambling club in Palestine, backpacked across California's High Sierra and, most impressively of all, survived the midges of Knoydart. His talk will touch on themes which shape his writing: freedom of movement, rewilding, and how our relationship to landscape shapes our identity.
